

.....starting with one person, one relationship, one family, one neighbor, one neighborhood, one village, one city, one state, one nation, at a time ...simultaneously.

Daniel Ellsberg.

'That was another part of what later came out as "Dr. Strangelove," the movie, in 1964. It was basically a documentary. It showed what actually could happen.

In that movie, a rogue general sends off planes and the president has no way to call them back. Actually, in the movie, they couldn't live with that entirely. They finally figure out that there was a coded way if only they could discover to code. In reality, there was no call back or stop order. Once the planes and the later missiles, were on their way—even though it might take many hours to get to Russia—nothing that happened in between their takeoff and their dropping their weapons could actually change their operations. There was no way to tell them either that the enemy had surrendered or that there had been a terrible mistake at the beginning that led to their launch, a false alarm or a change of mind by the president.'

The Domsday Machine.

"Bones, why couldn't humans make Earth work for humanity?"

STAR DATE 2525.

"Damn it Jim, I'm a medical doctor, not a forensic anthropologist!"

Sent from the New Republic.