Romanticism as a movement was characterized by a longing for the Medieval chivalric age, nationalism, and a feeling for nature.

The Romantic age is thought to have begun as early as 1770, but probably was not in full swing until the end of the French Revolution. The first great literary work of the movement was Lyrical Ballads, a collection of poetry by William Wordsworth and Samuel Taylor Coleridge published in 1799.

Romantic Art

In landscape art, Romantics picked subjects that elevated nature, often dwarfing the human in comparison. Sometimes Romantic art depicted sentimental and heroic figures. These seemed small in relation to the forces of nature. Yet humanity remained a focal point of their work. Nature is portrayed as vague, powerful, and barely restrained. Friedrich's Wanderer above the Sea and Fog (1815) shows a solitary gentleman looking out over a seascape with breakers smashing against the shore. The figure seems to contemplate the elements with stoic determination mixed with admiration and awe. The wanderer is focused on nature, even while all of nature seems focused upon him.

You know it when you're in it.

In all heavens, beauty reigns,
Its beings possess much of divinity.
Peace and harmony rule these realms,
Their beings know not the word 'war'.

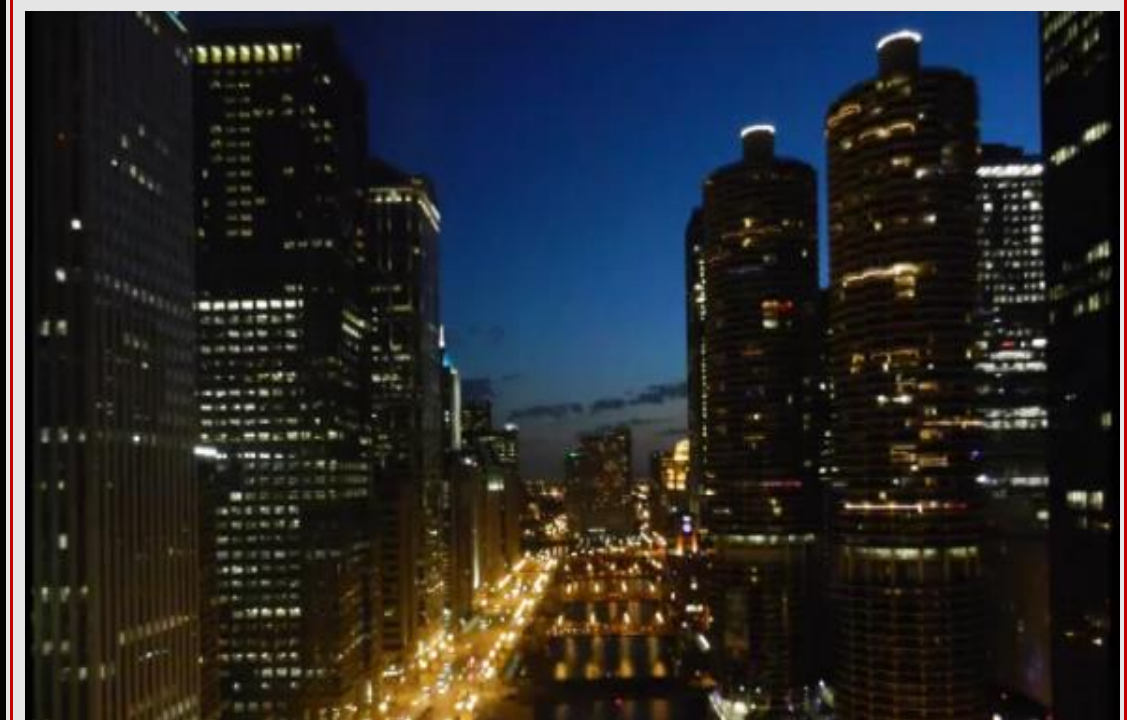

Victor Hugo

He who binds to himself a joy
Does the winged life destroy;
But he who kisses the joy as it flies

Lives in eternity's sun rise.
